Cooked: Survival by Zip Code

January 16

Looking through the lens of the 1995 Chicago heat wave, this documentary examines how race, poverty, and geography intersect, shedding light on the ways systemic inequities and climate change combine to disproportionately impact underserved communities.

Troubled Water

February 20

Lifelong friends Chris Yahanda and William Wright embark on a 425-mile paddleboard journey across Lake Michigan and the Grand River, exploring environmental threats to the Great Lakes and discovering the power of community in protecting the waters they love.

Women of Carbon

March 20

This film highlights innovative women redefining our relationship with carbon by repurposing living materials and driving decarbonization, while navigating challenges in male-dominated industries to restore, protect, and preserve the planet.

Common Ground

April 17

Dig into the regenerative agriculture movement and consider how working to heal our soils holds the power to mitigate climate change, restore ecosystems, and build a more equitable food system, while hearing from diverse voices working together to create a sustainable future.

Water for Life

May 15

Hear the powerful stories of Berta Cáceres, Francisco Pineda, and Alberto Curamil—three Indigenous leaders who fought to protect their water resources from exploitation by governments and corporations, despite facing threats, corruption, and violence, all while advocating for environmental justice and Indigenous rights.
